The 15th Annual Labor Summer Internship Program is a full-time PAID internship for UC Berkeley graduate and undergraduate students. This is an opportunity for you to spend eight weeks in Northern and possibly Central California developing leadership, research, and organizing skills while working with unions and community-based organizations striving for justice for California’s working people.

If you are passionate about social and economic justice, apply for the Labor Summer Internship Program and be a part of building a better California!

June 20–August 12, 2016

application deadline:
February 29, 2016, 8:00 am (PST)

For more information or to apply online please visit http://laborcenter.berkeley.edu, or contact Alicia Flores at alicia.flores@berkeley.edu or 510-643-0910.

Labor Summer welcomes participation from students of all genders, and racial and ethnic backgrounds. Students of color, women, LGBTQIA identified students, DACA (deferred action for childhood arrivals) students, and students from low-income and working class backgrounds are encouraged to apply. The University of California is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer.

“Labor Summer opened my eyes to the world of labor, a world that impacts all of our lives. It provided me with an enriching professional experience, long-lasting relationships and a deeper understanding and empathy for the movement.”

“This experience really grounded me and helped me focus on why I do what I do in school and how important it is for academia to ground itself outside of the campus walls. If you’re interested in social change and learning, this is an amazing opportunity to do both.”
